Subject: undergraduate research opportunity

Hello, all,

If you work with or teach undergraduate students, you might want to call their attention to the Archival Scholar Research Awards sponsored by the ULS.

Awardees develop an independent research project using materials in the library archives or special collections. This might be most relevant to students with an interest in the history or philosophy of science.

Students participate in workshops and presentations. They also receive a $1,000 stipend.

For more information students can attend one of two sessions:

Mon., October 3, 4-6 pm

Thurs., October 6, 4-6 pm

Digital Scholarship Commons, on the ground floor of Hillman Library.

Application and award requirements can be found at asundergrad.pitt.edu/our

I'm also attaching a "postcard" with information about the awards.

Thanks,
Margarete

Undergrads: Apply to be an Archival Scholar!

Awardees develop an independent research project using the library's archives and/or special collections, many of which tie into the University-wide Year of Diversity. We have materials representing African-American history, LGBT history, women's history, and many other topics!

i If selected, you'll:

- Receive a $1,000 stipend
- Learn about archives, manuscripts, and rare books.
- Participate in three workshops and spring term-end presentations

Application and award requirements at:
